"As many peanuts as I grow," says Mike Moorman, a leading Southeastern peanut farmer, "I have to have combines I can depend on to get the harvesting done as quickly and as efficiently as possible before bad weather sets in.

"We can't afford down-time for repairs when peanuts are ready. "I've been using Lilliston Hi-Cap Peanut Combines since the first model was introduced in 1972, because they will pick so many more peanuts in a day than other combines I've used.

"True, the Hi-Cap costs more than other combines, but it is a better machine and I feel that the additional cost is more than offset by reduced labor and operational costs, and by saving more peanuts.

"It's simple: I use Lilliston Hi-Caps because in my peanut operation I need the best."
